Not illustrated. 1826 edition. Excerpt: ... then made reluctantly: but the emperor insisted; he acquired the habit of commanding every thing, his troops that of omitting to execute all that he commanded. Dombrowski was however left before this place, with his Polish division, which Napoleon called eight thousand men, although he perfectly well knew that it did not then consist of more than twelve hundred; but such, either from the idea that his words would be repeated "and would deceive the enemy, or from a desire, by this exaggerated valuation, to make his generals feel what he expected from them, was Ids custom. There remained Witepsk. From the houses of that town the eye plunges perpendicularly into the Dana, or to the bottom of the precipices which surround its walls. In this climate the snow lies long upon the ground, It filters through the least solid parts of the rocks, penetrates to a great depth, and causes them to rift, and crumble down. To this cause are to be attributed those deep ravines which occur so unexpectedly, and for which no inequality of the surface prepares the eye. They are imperceptible at a few paces from their sides, and have surprised and suddenly arrested charges of cavalry in the midst of these vast plains. A month would have sufficed for Frenchmen to put this town in a state to stand even a regular siege; even the slight addition to the means afforded for its defence by nature was neglected. At the same time some millions of francs indispensable for raising the Lithuanian troops were refused. The insurrection of the South was to be headed by prince Sangutsko; he was detained at the imperial quarters. The moderation of Napoleon's recent language had not, however, deceived those immediately about him. They remembered that, at the first sight of the,...
