Living With No Regrets Is Harder Than It Seems

Readers who love stories of women finding their truths will enjoy Ford's spot-on portrayal of midlife change, friendship, and romance. –BookLife by Publishers Weekly

Finley isn't exactly sure when her life began to feel unfamiliar. She suspects the transformation started long before she caught her husband and fellow garden club member doing the white-trash-two-step on her new Bernhardt sofa. Now free from the shackles of a loveless marriage, and with her children off to college, she's finally able to go searching for the missing pieces of her heart. Finley's best friend, Cathyanne, is already working hard to ensure that Finley finds true love this time around. But when Finley is unwittingly tossed into the arms of two men—their sexy trainer and her neighbor, a popular country star—Cathyanne fears finding the right guy will be more complicated than she ever could have imagined.

For Finley, building a new life feels as impossible as flying a paper airplane to the moon. But maybe, just maybe, with the right help, she will find her whole heart—even if it's in the very last place she thinks to look.
