Thomas Merton and Thich Nhat Hanh: Engaged Spirituality in an Age of Globalization Robert H. King

Thomas Merton and Thich Nhat Hanh were and are two of the foremost spiritual writers of their times. They met only once—at Gethsemani Abbey on May 26, 1966. "Individually," says Robert King, "they are important, but considered together they may be even more significant. For although their lives developed independently of one another and took quite different forms, they shed light on each other in wonderful and unexpected ways." What binds the two is the theme of contemplation and action. King explores how they came to understand the relationship between contemplative practice and social action in the context of their respective religious traditions, and he identifies the common features in their approach to engaged spirituality—a form of religious practice that could serve as a unifying paradigm for the world's religions in an age of globalization.
