Pooling Ideas David Nicholls

As a teacher of art for almost two decades at a school for children with physical disabilities, the author, David Nicholls describes in this book the computer techniques he has employed. Working with children from nursery to school-leaving age he has learnt that their artistic ability was inhibited only by their physical limitation. Through using computers the pupils have produced exciting and often brilliant work. David Nicholls describes the techniques he has employed, which should be useful to teachers using computers in art classes in schools and also to those working with children and young people who have special educational needs.
